Twin Creeks Still Operational Amidst Pandemic in Australia

September 15, 2021

September 15, 2021 -
According to the latest report, New South Wales has been hit by an influx of COVID-19 that is already threatening the lives of many. The latest numbers indicate 633 cases to 8 pm, which breaks records in less than 24 hours. Premier Gladys Berejiklian warns this could be just the beginning as they have only confirmed 62 people from those infected with COVID-19 are infectious outside their homes or workplaces - meaning there's still more out there who may not know it yet.

The government is also urging people not to panic as it has plans in place. The NSW Health Department explained that the virus does not affect everyone equally, and some people may get away with fever, coughs and other minor symptoms. Due to this recent epidemic of Corona Virus, Twin Creeks is taking measures for their customers and staff members to be safe.

Though the plague has affected many businesses, including golf courses, leisure centers hotels chains, and health clubs; some services available for those who follow protocols and safety guidelines such as wearing gloves while handling food or equipment that could be contaminated with bodily harm fluids.

The management put safety measures in place to ensure that their residents and guests are safe from this pandemic while still being able to enjoy many of the amenities they offer.

To maintain a safe environment, the government has issued instructions for personal hygiene and social distancing. To comply with these demands, they participate in frequent hand washing and do their best to avoid contact with sick people so that there is minimal risk of spreading the virus.
