Louisville Tree Service Experts Helps Homeowner Plant the Right Trees Under Powerlines

Louisville, Kentucky ? When Mr Johnson invited Louisville Tree Service Experts to his home for a tree trimming project, he mentioned that he was thinking of planting several trees under the powerlines to create a privacy screen. He wanted to shield his home from the eyes of the people passing on the road just next to his house.

?When we asked him the trees he intended to plant,? said the head of field operations, ?he said he was thinking of planting white pines. This made us realize that Mr Johnson did not understand how important tree height is when planting under powerlines. White pines can grow to be over 100 feet tall ? this means if Mr Johnson had planted white pines, in a few years, he would have invited our tree service removal team Louisville to bring down the trees so that they do not cause power outages.?

The Louisville Tree Service Experts CEO noted that the best trees to plant under powerlines should mature at a height of 25 feet and below. He noted that these are the trees that have zero potential of touching the powerlines and increasing the risks of electrocution or shorting the wires and causing an electric outage.

?To keep Mr Johnson from planting the wrong trees unknowingly,? said the company?s CEO, ?we recommended trees that do well in Louisville and mature at a height below 20 feet. Most of them were ornamental trees ? we wanted to give our client an aesthetically appealing front yard. Some of the trees we recommended included serviceberry which matures at a height of 20 feet, the fringe tree which grows to be 18 to 20 feet, and staghorn sumac which grows to be 20 to 25 feet.?

A company that has been offering tree services for the last 25+ years, Louisville Tree Service Experts has more than just a tree trimming team Louisville and a tree removal team. The company also handles other services that range from tree pruning and stump removal to emergency tree service Louisville.

In addition to the decades of tree service experience, the company boasts advanced tree service tools. Using these tools, the company notes that it can make the most complicated tree service procedures seem extremely easy.
