Fort Lauderdale, FL - The Source Treatment Center in Fort Lauderdale, FL has received more than one hundred 5-star Google reviews from former clients and their loved ones. Each review is unique and tells its own story of hope and transformation. In one recent review, a woman by the name of Melinda reached out to thank The Source for helping her best friend who was celebrating her one-year sober anniversary.

Melinda said, ?My best friend struggled with alcohol addiction for years and had been through several other rehab programs. She found The Source online and went for a couple of months. By her own admission, she left too early against her counselors? advice. She lasted about six weeks before succumbing again to the terrible disease of alcoholism. She reached a point where ?rock bottom? wasn?t even a low enough description. I reached out to The Source because even though my friend had left before she should, she had nothing but great things to say about the program and the staff. I couldn?t believe how responsive Randy was and how helpful he was in getting my friend back into treatment so quickly. He went out of his way to be available for questions before she got there, after her arrival, and to address concerns thereafter. My friend stayed five months and came home an entirely new person. Mind you, I?d not recognized the woman I sent to Florida for about fifteen years- that?s how long and how severe her struggle was. I?m writing this review on the one-year anniversary of her sobriety and I don?t believe it would have been possible without the empathy, love, support, and personal investment she received from every single individual at The Source. She tells me she misses the people there-have you ever heard of such a thing? A recovered person ?missing? rehab? I can never thank everyone at The Source for giving me back my best friend. If you?re looking for help for yourself or a loved one, you can?t go wrong with The Source.?

At The Source, life-changing experiences like Melinda?s are regular occurrences. Their founders, and most of their staff, are in recovery themselves so they know firsthand how challenging treatment can be. They also know the joy and freedom that come from a life in recovery and they share their experiences, hope, and strength with each of their clients.

The many testimonials and reviews shared by people like Melinda all have a common thread. They all express gratitude for the genuine empathy, love, and support they received from the staff and owners of The Source. This is what truly sets The Source apart and leads to their client successes.

The Source staff are highly experienced in addiction treatment and take great pride in helping clients achieve successful recovery. They extend this courtesy to the families of those they serve as well. Family involvement in treatment is encouraged as family members and loved ones typically become an important part of a person?s support network after treatment. Family therapy is also provided to help mend strained relationships and help clients come together with their families to address addiction, its underlying causes, and its repercussions.

Addiction and mental health conditions often go hand in hand as they are each risk factors for the other. When someone has substance use disorder and a mental health condition like anxiety, depression, or bipolar disorder, it?s known as a dual diagnosis. The Source specializes in dual diagnosis treatment and their programs are designed to help clients identify and resolve the root causes of addiction which often involve some form of trauma. They utilize multiple forms of therapy that have proven effective in resolving the lasting impacts of trauma as well as medication-assisted treatment and group and individual counseling to help people understand their triggers to use alcohol and drugs and how to manage them in healthier ways.

?I am so grateful for The Source and the incredibly caring staff who work so hard for every individual in their program,? Melinda said.
