New Waist Pack For Runners Launched

October 15, 2015

October 15, 2015 -
Govivo, a provider of a number of health and fitness products, has recently launched the company's running belt, which is designed for large sized smartphones and offers convenience for runners who tend to take along their phones with them when they hit the streets. The media director for Govivo has released a statement about the product saying, "It's the perfect accessory for running, biking, or generally hitting the gym because it keeps your smartphone secure and within reach."

The company states that the product can be used for any type of sports, such as hiking or even just walking the dog, and that it makes life a bit simpler while out and about. It also provides a place to carry personal items while at work, running errands, and traveling. The company spokesperson explains, "When sightseeing on vacation, you want something that isn't too heavy but still has a space for everything. Use it as a money bag so you don't have to lug around a heavy purse. It was designed with convenience and security in mind."

Govivo also points out that the belt can be used to hold inhalers, diabetic supplies, and other medicinal needs while still offering a lightweight solution to larger bags. They added that it can also be helpful for those heading to the amusement park or zoo, or for those who are just taking their kids to the playground. The media director states, "From sports to medical supplies and vacations, this belt is perfect for anyone."

The waist pack is available now on the Amazon marketplace in black, and can fit the newest iPhone as well as an Otter Box for those who use this protective device. The company has revealed that they have many in stock and ready to ship, and offer a money back guarantee for any customer who is not completely satisfied.

More about the fanny pack can be seen on the company's Amazon seller's page, which offers specifics such as dimensions and safety features. Those interested in learning more about the company and any new products that they may be releasing in the future can visit them at their official website.
