Bertha Mae's Brownie Co, a company based in Sherman Oaks, CA, is proud to announce that their fudgy brownies were featured on Food Network. The article on the Food Network mentions how the secret recipe for the brownie has been handed down from the 1800s. Wendy Pomerantz, the founder, and CEO of the company decided to share the taste of the brownies recipe that was created by her great grandmother Bertha Mae (born in 1880) and handed down through several generations until it reached Wendy.

Heath Goldman, the author of the Food Network article, received a box of Bertha Mae's Brownies Sea Salt & Caramel brownies from a man who also happened to have the same name as her. This particular guy happened to be Wendy's husband and asked if he could send the Food Network author a box of brownies. When the article author received the brownies, she noted that they made her feel that the brownies reflected the love of mothers for their families.

"This article was such a fun and random opportunity to meet someone, share some funny stories and share our treats with them, and to allow us to continue to bring a smile one bite at a time," said Wendy.

The products offered by Bertha Mae's Brownie Co can be classified into several categories. These include protein brownies, breads, brownies, cakes, cookies, and gluten-free brownies. Bertha Mae's Brownie Co

A long time ago in 1880, a little girl named Bertha Mae was born. She grew up to create the tastiest brownie recipe and passed it along to her children. It got passed down to me and now I create brownies for the world to taste.
