AmPm Restoration follows a particular process for damage restoration. The first step is for a water restoration expert to conduct an inspection and an evaluation of the site in order to classify and identify the kind of destruction that has resulted and then provide a rough estimate of the amount of work that is needed to bring back the home to its former condition. The second step is to repair or replace any broken pipes. This is a key step in the process because it is essential address the cause of the problem. The third step is to get rid of any stagnant water. This has to be extracted as early as possible or else the stagnant water can worsen and result into more damage for the property.

The fourth step of the water damage restoration process would be to dehumidify and dry the area. This is started after the water has already been removed. Any materials that still contain water have to be dried by using air movers and dehumidifiers. Wet materials can get damaged by getting warped or due to the growth of mold. The restoration experts will check on the moisture levels of the floors and walls to find out if the area is already sufficiently dry for expert cleaning.

The fifth step is professional sanitation and cleaning. This process includes dry cleaning, wet cleaning, and spray and wipe cleaning. Restoration professionals will try to preserve as much of the property as much as possible. They can use abrasive, foam, and immersion cleaning procedures. If mold restoration is needed, it will also be performed during this step.

The sixth and final step will be the repair and restoration of the property. Any of the items in the home that have been damaged or had to be eliminated will be either repaired or replaced. The restoration work may include relatively minor repairs such as drywall repairing or carpet washing or complex repairs where parts of the property will need to be rebuilt.
