Ellicott City, MD ? When it comes to plumbing, one wants to make sure that the experts called to help with everything from a leaky pipe to water heater replacement or repair are well-trained. Since 1977, Heil Plumbing has been a proud member of the Howard County community and as such, has been dedicated to ensuring that their team is kept abreast of all the latest developments and technology in the plumbing industry. To that end, Edward Heil, one of the owners of the plumbing company in Ellicott City, MD, recently conducted a continuing education course for their technicians focusing on gas pressure regulators.

Either pilot-operated or direct-operated, a gas pressure regulator is a device that allows the flow of gas or liquid to be cut when the pressure reaches a certain pre-defined pressure setting. The course centered around the different types of gas regulators (indoor and outdoor applications) as well as the correct positions for each type. While the training used to be conducted every month, the Heil technicians expressed great interest in the recent course and as a result, the courses are now offered weekly. ?We strive to keep our technicians educated and up to date with the plumbing codes as they change so we can bring our customers the highest quality service possible,? stated another of Heil Plumbing?s owners, Laurie Heil.

Heil Plumbing offers a variety of plumbing services 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to customers in Ellicott City, Columbia, Fulton, Laurel, and the surrounding areas. The well-trained and experienced team can assist with in-depth plumbing needs efficiently and effectively, utilizing the latest technology to provide prompt, reliable service.
