Alexander D. Napolin, owner of Napolin Accident Injury Lawyer Glendora, says, "Many delay in pursuing their rights from inaction created from feelings of grief. However, it is important to talk to knowledgeable personal injury attorneys if negligence is involved. A delay investigating the facts surrounding the accident could result in unanswerable questions needed to prove the case. An attorney can initiate an immediate investigation. Attorneys with experience in the field of personal injury also provide valuable wisdom, guidance and support during their client's grieving process."

Delaying consultation with a lawyer is not advisable. If a wrongful death attorney is not consulted early on, many things could be lost in failing to use such valuable resources. Some of the things that a lawyer can help with include: getting some financial help from a reputable firm to take care of expenses while litigation is still pending; handling of estate matters for the decedent; advice on how to resolve difficult issues due to the loss of a loved one; investigating the circumstances surrounding the fatal accident; determining insurance policy availability and filing a claim; prosecution of a lawsuit to get the best possible compensation; and more.

It is important to note that wrongful death lawsuits are possible when a person is killed as a result of another person's negligence. Oftentimes, compensation can be obtained from the homeowner or car insurance policy of the negligent person. There are three kinds of legal damages available in California. These are economic damages, non-economic damages, and punitive damages. Economic damages are due to the lost financial contributions that the decedent had been providing to the family. Non-economic damages are for the lost companionship, pain and suffering, loss of protection, loss of medical coverage / pension, and more. Punitive damages are for punishing the defendant for bad behavior.

Meanwhile, if the decedent is a child, by getting the help of a child injury lawyer Glendora parents, grandparents, and other loved ones who have suffered damages because of the death of the victim can file a claim. And whether the victim is a child or an adult, this claim for wrongful death can be filed against a broad range of people, businesses, and even government agencies. For instance, if the person died due to a fatal slip and fall in a commercial establishment, the company who owns that establishment may be held liable for failure to ensure the safety of that store. If a person dies because of an accident caused by a drunk driver, the claim will be filed against the drunk driver.
