True Potential Chiropractic is providing the best treatment for chronic neck pain relief Beaverton, OR, has to offer.

Patients can suffer from chronic neck pain for a number of different reasons. It can be lifestyle-related such as lack of physical activity or poor posture while working. It can even manifest itself in patients who have been in an auto accident or those who have been dealing with a sports-related injury. In some cases, the neck and spinal cord may have seemed and felt fine for days or weeks after the accident and the chronic pain may have started to bother the patient a long while after the inciting incident took place.

Chiropractic doctors have been trained to look out for and treat a number of chronic neck-related conditions such as cervical intervertebral disc injuries, cervical sprain injuries, degenerative joint syndrome, facet joint sprain, and whiplash. They begin by examining the areas of the body that have restricted movement and then combining that information with the patient's overall posture and spinal alignment. A chiropractor will create a plan for treating the patient's entire body using a combination of corrective care which is corrective spinal adjustments based off of x-ray biomarkers, manual therapy, and other techniques.

Cervical manipulation can loosen up the joints of the cervical vertebrae in the neck reducing pain caused by pinched nerves, muscle spasms, and strains. Cervical manipulation techniques include instrument-assisted manipulation, during which the chiropractor uses a hand-held instrument to apply force without thrusting into the spine, and specific corrective spinal adjustments based off of a x-ray biomarker which helps restore joint movement using a gentle thrusting technique. Chiropractors can even suggest other therapies such as instrument-assisted soft tissue therapy, manual joint stretching, resistance techniques, therapeutic massages, and trigger point therapy to address the chronic neck pain issues faced by the patient.

Since the patient was expected to work on a computer 5-7 hours per day, the patient mentioned he was considering changing careers because the pain wasn't worth staying at his job. Corrective care chiropractic helped to align the patient's spine at the core of the body. With the help of wellness care, the patient was able to continue working the job he loves without pain.
