Infinite Wellness Center, a medical center in Glen Carbon, IL, has recently released new information explaining the benefits of IV therapy treatment. Celebrities have often used this kind of therapy as a way to fight a cold or a hangover but it is actually for everyone because it offers an effective method for delivering vitamins and antioxidants quickly to various parts of the body. As such, it may be used as a treatment for various conditions, such as arthritis, headaches, nausea and fatigue. While each treatment session will last for about 20 minutes, it is expected to have long-lasting impact on health. In addition to providing treatment for some immediate health issues, its benefits are rejuvenating, restorative, and preventive.

One important benefit offered by IV treatment is enhanced overall wellness as a result of the supplementation of a person's diet with the various vitamins and nutrients required by the body. And because these nutrients and vitamins are delivered intravenously, the effect is much faster. Some infusions may also consist of immune system boosters that may help reduce a person's chances of catching a cold or flu. For instance, vitamin C may be delivered intravenously to help minimize a person's risks, especially when taken daily.

Another benefit of IV treatment is, of course, illness prevention. This is important because many factors that people encounter during their daily lives, such as lack of sleep, stress, and a poor diet can negatively affect the immune system. When the immunological function is weakened, a person has a higher risk of getting sick. IV therapy treatment can be used to deliver nutrients to the body that will help strengthen the immune system. Also, the body will feel energetic and refreshed after intravenous therapy, which helps in preventing sickness.

IV treatment may also be used for beauty enhancement. It can be used to deliver those vitamins and nutrients that can help promote clearer and brighter skin and enhance nail and hair growth. These are the same nutrients and vitamins contained in oral supplements and topical creams but IV delivery allows for better absorption in the body, which provides faster results. This treatment may also be used to stimulate the body to produce collagen fibers and this can have a positive impact on wrinkles, fine lines, and total skin health.

IV treatment may also be used by athletes to improve their performance. Recently, athletes have also been using intravenous therapy to recover from injuries and the accompanying pain. The pain and fatigue is caused by a buildup of lactic acid in the muscles. With IV hydration, circulation is improved and allows for removal of waste products, such as the lactic acid and carbon dioxide. IV electrolytes may be able to prevent muscle cramps and spasms. These electrolytes can help to combat the effects of dehydration, allowing the athlete to perform better.

And finally, intravenous therapy may help in providing relief from a hangover. Alcohol is a depressant, which slows down various systems of the body up to the point where they shut down. Alcohol also functions as a diuretic, which increases urination and fluid loss, possibly resulting in dehydration and electrolyte imbalances, which exacerbate the alcohol-related symptoms of nausea and fatigue. Fluids and electrolytes may be delivered intravenously to rehydrate the body and counteract the hangover.

Infinite Wellness Center in Glen Carbon, IL, was established by Dr. Ryan Cleland to provide healing treatments for a variety of issues, using an integrated approach to health care that is focused on treating people as a whole instead of just a collection of symptoms.
