December 02, 2021 -
Bryter Restoration of Wilmington is helping homeowners and business owners in Wilmington, NC, and nearby areas of Wrightsville Beach, Myrtle Beach, Ogden, Moorehead City, and Carolina Beach restore their property from water damage caused by an adverse weather event or faulty plumbing.

Water damage is severely detrimental to the safety and integrity of a home or property. Water or moisture seeps deep into the building materials, weakening them and hollowing them out from the inside, making them susceptible to giving out if the damage is not corrected in time.

North Carolina is ranked fourth, after Florida, Texas, and Louisiana, in the number of cyclones that produced hurricane-force winds in a U.S. state. Due to its location next to the Atlantic ocean, it bears the brunt of many storms throughout the year, with some of them catching enough momentum to cause real damage to the homes and properties in the state. The professionals at Bryter Restoration, which operates out of the coastal city of Wilmington, are used to solving problems of that nature as they are on the front line of dealing with storm damage.

The water damage restoration company recommends a few steps that should be taken by all home and property owners if they want to make preparations to minimize storm damage. The company?s recommended steps are all within reach of regular homeowners as they don?t require special equipment other than an observant eye and little resourcefulness.

The trees around the property are likely to be a hazard, especially if they have loose limbs that could shear off in strong winds and collide with the house. It is recommended to call an arborist to ensure that the tree is strong enough to resist the strong forces of nature that it is going to go up against or it is better to remove the tree entirely if it is too old or diseased. Outdoor items such as tables and patio chairs should be brought in or tucked away safely in storage. The home?s drainage system should be thoroughly examined for blockages to ensure that in case of excessive water levels, the water has a path to drain out instead of seeping into the foundation and damaging it. The roof should be inspected for loose shingles and leaks, especially if the house is old or the roof hasn?t had any maintenance done in over a decade.

If a homeowner prepares for the worst and still has to deal with water damage they can call professionals such as those at Bryter Restoration of Wilmington to restore the home to its former self. The company offers extensive water damage cleanup services that ensure every nook and cranny of the house is inspected and restored as it was. The company hires only the best IICRC (Institute of Inspection, Cleaning, and Restoration Certification) certified technicians that have been trained to reverse water damage effects and forestall them from damaging the property further. The team is equipped with the latest technology such as advanced moisture detection equipment that lets them examine and spot the damage in parts of the home that are not visible to the naked eye.

A spokesperson for the company talks about its services by saying, ?We are a local leader in water damage restoration. We have an extraordinarily capable staff that we have assembled to restore everything from floors, walls, roofing, structures, and personal property. They have decades of experience between them, ensuring you that you get the best possible service for your time and money.
