Houston, Texas - December 10, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Attorney Rose Sanders and her Texas personal injury legal team have many years of shared experience at what they do. They often put that experience to good use to alleviate an accident victim's fears to come forward and pursue a legal claim against those that wronged them. A good example of this is a recent blog article that was posted to the Rose Sanders Law Firm website that talks about why someone will not lose their job if they make a legal claim after an injury at work.

This new blog is titled "Personal Injury: What to Do After an Injury at Work" and can be viewed here at <https://www.rosesanderslaw.com/blog/2021/10/personal-injury-what-to-do-after-an-injury-at-work/>. It also includes some good tips on how a personal injury victim should communicate with their employer after a job-related accident.

The blog started by saying that those at the law firm realize that getting injured in the workplace can be a frustrating and often confusing experience but the injured person should be aware that they may be entitled to receive compensation. This is to protect them in the case where a job-related injury may keep them from performing their normal work duties and getting paid or from being fired because an employer did not want to pay income loss benefits. That's why if someone has been injured at work, they should speak to a competent personal injury attorney before they sign off on actions that the employer will take. The article then went on to list several steps that the person that was injured in a workplace accident should take. The first of which is getting any necessary medical care and then following that up with a call to an experienced personal injury attorney. It is also recommended that if the employer has workers' compensation coverage to pursue a claim in that area too. Also discussed in the blog, was the rights that a workplace accident victim has and the benefits of hiring a personal injury attorney to protect those rights. Many good blogs with useful personal injury information such as this can be seen on the firm's website at <https://www.rosesanderslaw.com/>.
