Choice Men's Health is one of the leading Atlanta, Georgia area men's health clinics when it comes to promoting men's sexual health. People often choose its services because it's a clinic that tailors its treatments to individuals instead of trying to use a one-size-fits-all approach to correct men's sexual health issues.

Another reason that this Atlanta men's clinic has become so popular is because it often posts informative men's sexual health content on its website. A good example of that is a recent article that touched upon the subject of (Erectile Dysfunction) ED treatment for seniors. The clinic's posts such as this one often discuss issues that some are reluctant to consult with their doctors because of the sensitive nature of sexual health and let them know that there is experienced help available to address these concerns.

This new Choice Men's Health article is titled 'The Best Erectile Dysfunction Treatment for Seniors'. It started by emphasizing that sexuality and sexual function are important indicators of quality of life for men of any age and that seniors, just like everyone else, require intimacy, physical affection, and sexual activity. The article also talked about how it often becomes more complicated for men to get the intimacy that they'd like to because problems such as ED sometimes make satisfying sexual activity more difficult.

This posted article was also quick to remind that all is not lost for seniors experiencing sexual health issues as many treatments have been developed that can aid in them continuing to enjoy intimacy in their golden years. The first related information that this new blog post covered was what are some of the common effects of aging on sexuality despite a person's gender. This includes depression, mobility & flexibility issues, coronary disease, vascular disease, and the prolonged use of over-the-counter and prescription medications. This new Choice Men's Health article, which can be viewed at https://www.choicemenshealth.com/the-best-erectile-dysfunction-treatment-for-seniors/ stated that ED is the most common type of sexual dysfunction for senior men.

As the article continued, it then discussed how the root causes of erectile dysfunction are diagnosed. This includes everything from evaluating a patient's complete medical history and discussing social and sexual issues that may also be contributing to this condition.

An approach that's done to identify known contributors to ED such as coronary artery disease, atherosclerotic disease, or any other chronic diseases that seniors may face. Often it helps to have the patient's partner with them during the diagnosis phase of the treatment. Doctors at experienced men's sexual health clinics such as theirs may also order screenings and lab work-ups to try and discover any underlying pathology that may be contributing to a senior patient's erectile dysfunction that's been overlooked.

This Choice Men's Health blog also discusses the most common medications and health conditions that contribute to ED. This includes such health conditions as diabetes, heart disease, high blood pressure, lower testosterone levels, cardiovascular disease, high cholesterol, and obesity, along with some possible neurological disorders. Medications that can have an impact on a man's ability to obtain or maintain an erection include blood pressure medication, thiazides, beta-blockers, diuretics, morphine, and some chemotherapy medications.

The article then followed up by going over some of the more popular treatments that are used to address ED in seniors at reputable clinics such as theirs. This often includes taking a two-pronged approach that treats underlying conditions and suggests lifestyle changes as well as the use of oral medications or other alternatives. These other alternatives consist of such treatments as penile injections before sexual activity that normally only cause short duration minor discomfort and have proven to be very popular in over 90% of the men that have used this form of ED treatment. This Choice Men's Health blog concluded by saying that these treatments vary in their effectiveness, but experienced men's health clinics such as theirs will work with a senior patient to develop the best ED treatment for them.

This article comes on the heels of another blog article that was recently posted to the Choice Men's Health website that gave more information on impotence and some of the ways that this often stressful men's sexual health issue is diagnosed and treated.
