With violent weather comes an increased potential for roof damage, in the form of both hail damage, and wind damage to homes. McHenry Roofing is working with local home and business owners that were impacted by providing professional inspection services to identify storm damage and offer solutions for repair. While a homeowner or property owner may have lived or worked in their property for many years, areas that have been damaged or had its structure compromised by a storm may get passed over by the untrained eye. It is important to have experience professionals to come in and inspect the property for potential issues. Whether a house flooded, sustained wind damage or was struck by lightning, the aftermath of a storm can pose serious dangers. Live power lines, mold and open areas of the property can put all the occupants at risk. It may even be a wise decision to leave the structure until a professional building inspector is able to evaluate the damage.

There are many benefits to having professional roofers to inspect after a storm. One of those benefits is the insurance claims process. Baltimore roofing company, McHenry Roofing, is very familiar with the insurance claims process and can help victims of storm damage prepare the documentation necessary to file their insurance claims.

When asked about the value of their 21-Point Roof Inspection, Company Representative, Joseph Conley, stated, "The value of having a roofing inspection done is to ensure that a small problem does not turn into a much larger problem. Baltimore, homeowners can feel peace of mind trusting their home to true local roofing professionals. This includes examining the roof for leak spots, missing shingles, broken shingles, lifted shingles, hail damage, and debris on the roof. We work with the homeowner and often find the many are even able to qualify for new roofs from their insurance because of the storm damage.?
