"Our ultimate goal is to restore your house to its pre-damage condition," explains Bryter of Bryter Water Damage Restoration. "Water that isn't cleaned up or cleared as soon as possible can ruin whatever it touches, from the walls and floor to your furniture and precious belongings. Furthermore, there is the ever-present danger of damp surfaces leading to mold growth, which can be incredibly harmful for your health. Fortunately, our team has the expertise required to deal with all kinds of water damage, and they are experienced enough at working in all kinds of environments to stop water damage from spreading no matter the layout of your home. If you find water damage in your home, there's only one solution you need to consider. Call us for help."

Mildew, as mold is known in its early stages, can grow on a variety of organic surfaces in the presence of water. The company acknowledges that it is easy to forget how many materials in a home can host mold in the right conditions, but the list is expansive. It includes all types of wood products, cardboard, carpets, drywall, fabric and even indoor plants, food, insulation and so on. As a result, the average home offers mold many opportunities to take root, so swift remediation is the most appropriate response when water damage is suspected.

Bryter Water Damage Restoration states that mildew and mold can appear in the first 24-48 hours of a suitable surface being exposed to water. If the source of moisture persists, it can grow and spread to other areas, especially since they reproduce via spores that can float through the air and latch onto nearby surfaces. This is one of the reasons why mold removal is a specialized process that must be carried out by professionals using equipment designed explicitly for this task.

The company explains that mold cannot simply be scraped or brushed off a surface it is growing on. Molds actually digest this material, and their spores can lead to other colonies similarly destroying other surfaces. Drywall and other porous materials, for instance, must be disposed of in their entirety once mold appears, but the company may be able to salvage non-porous materials. As always, the number of materials that can be saved is inversely proportional to the time it takes for the team at Bryter Water Damage Restoration to be notified ? in other words, the longer a homeowner takes to call a water damage restoration service, the more items will be irrevocably damaged.

However, even if this were to occur, homeowners will still be able to see their property restored to its pre-damage condition. As an accomplished contractor, Bryter Water Damage Restoration can rebuild whatever structures have been lost, and their team has a certain eye for detail that their customers have appreciated greatly over the years.

A recent review from Cohen H. sheds light on a situation many homeowners will have to deal with. Awarding the company a full 5-Star rating for their efforts, the Google review says, "When we came back from our winter vacation, we had a foot of water in our living room that needed removal. Our insurance agent suggested that we use this company. They did an excellent job, ultimately getting the home back to where it was originally."

Another review from Betty M. remarks that the company's team, "Showed up on time and worked hard until the water damage repairs were made. We had gotten a hole in our roof from a tree branch and the water was pouring into our house. Bryter Water Damage Restoration of Cary got it done right!"
