

Maid Service Direct Reveals What the House Cleaner Wishes the Client Knew in a New Blog Post

Maid Service Direct, a professional home cleaning company based in Philadelphia, PA, has recently published a blog post about the things the house cleaner wishes the client knew, but will not usually tell the client about it. It is important to realize that in between cleanings, it is the responsibility of the client to keep the home as clean as possible. Some care must be exercised by the residents of the home to keep the home as clean and fresh as possible before the next scheduled cleaning service. Expecting the home cleaner to make everything clean again after making the home so messy is not realistic.

Meanwhile, one of the things that the house cleaner wishes the client knew is how to accurately describe the cleaning task. While home cleaners have a lot of experience and know how to handle just about any kind of mess, they wouldn?t want any surprises. For instance, the rug may have been messed up by the kids and pets so that there are a lot of messy spills and even pet poop. If the home cleaners are provided with advance warning about the state of the rug, they will come prepared to handle such a mess and they can suggest some things that the client can do before they arrive. If not informed, the cleaners may not have all of the necessary tools and supplies for such a major carpet or floor cleaning task and this could delay the completion of their cleaning tasks.

Also, some clients may not realize that home cleaners will typically clean and tidy up those areas that can be reached by a three-step stool. If the client expects cleaning those places beyond the reach of a cleaner standing on a three-step stool, the home cleaning service must be informed before placing an order to make sure that their expectations will be complied with. It is important to note that safety is always a priority for the cleaner, particularly when it comes to cleaning those high areas.

Clients will also need to be aware that window blinds can break easily when they are being cleaned. This is because the material can get brittle due to the constant exposure to the sun?s radiation. Home cleaning services may charge extra for the cleaning of window blinds because of this, or they may ask the client to accept a disclaimer in case the blinds get damaged during the cleaning process.

And clients who want an area behind heavy and large appliances or furniture to be cleaned must have the appliance or furniture moved before the scheduled cleaning. This is because home cleaners will not attempt to move any heavy furniture or appliances because of the risk of injury, not to mention possible damage to the floor and other valuables in the home. Thus, it is a good idea to have the refrigerator moved out from the wall sufficiently far enough from the wall to allow the cleaner to reach that particular area with a mop or broom.
