Manhattan, New York: A new report by Any Credit reveals the top options for procuring quick financial assistance. The report, published on Any Credit's website, was compiled by the company's financial experts. The report was released to address an immediate concern for people whose credit score is suffering.

Several studies have shown that income and expenses vary greatly between US households and that most people with bad credit do not have enough income to cover daily expenses. 16% of Americans have a credit score below 580, so borrowers should know the best financial solutions and credit providers who offer quick financial services for bad credit. The publication primarily focuses on financial assistance options for anyone with bad credit. In addition, it also includes an analysis of what the various companies offer and how to avail of their services.

According to Any Credit, the company's experts compiled the report after thorough market research. The purpose of the publication was to help those with bad credit by guiding them on their options for getting quick funds. The report described other critical factors to consider before taking financial assistance, to provide people with bad credit with a better understanding of how credit works. The report uncovered the five best companies, their requirements, and what they offer. The report concluded by answering frequently asked questions about taking financial assistance with bad credit. The full report can be found here.

Since the launch of their site, financial advisor Any Credit has provided information, advice, research, reviews, comparisons, and analyses for helping individuals and businesses better understand and manage their finances. The report was published as part of their regular research on credit, debt, and financial assistance for their readers.
