February 01, 2022

Perth, Western Australia - February 01, 2022 -
The Applecross Dentist is providing emergency dentistry services to help those suffering from dental pain in Perth get immediate relief.

There can be a number of reasons for sudden toothaches. Some people might have sensitive teeth because their enamel, the hard outer layer of a tooth, has worn off exposing the nerve endings in the middle. This can cause the person to feel a sharp pain when they eat something too hot or too cold. If a tooth is cracked, either due to cavities or blunt force trauma, the same can happen. If a person?s diet is highly acidic, the enamel can wear off too often and too fast, leading to sharp pain when a person bites into certain foods. The same can happen if they don?t follow proper dental care and end up using too much force while brushing their teeth.

Gum disease is another common reason for tooth pain. It is caused by the gums receding away from the teeth, exposing their roots. This can cause the teeth to become very sensitive and it also increases the risk for tooth infections. Gum disease is very common as it is known to affect almost half of the adults over 30 years of age. Gum disease will gradually worsen until one day the pain becomes unbearable and the person has to seek urgent medical help. Some other commonly observed conditions that can cause sudden tooth pain include sinus infections, sensitivity after dental procedures, and improper use of teeth bleaching products.

A spokesperson for The Applecross Dentist, formerly known as The New Dentist, talks about the many situations in which a person may have to seek emergency dental care by saying, "Dental problems are insidious in nature. Gums and teeth tend to deteriorate slowly with almost no indication of their rot. When the damage goes deep enough and a certain threshold gets breached, the nerve endings, the most sensitive part of the tooth, get exposed, leading to sudden tooth pain. At The Applecross Dentist, we understand how debilitating toothaches can be as they sap all of one?s energy and concentration and make it extremely difficult to make it through the day productively. That is why we utilize only the most advanced and innovative digital technology to relieve your immediate concerns and restore your oral health. If you are in Perth and in a lot of pain, you have probably gone through the trouble of searching for an emergency dentist. If this is the case, you should call The Applecross Dentist right now and speak to us about your problem. We will get you an appointment as soon as possible to make sure tooth pain doesn?t impede you from making the most out of your life."
