Water damage is typically the result of too much water inside a property, such as flooding caused by storms, leaking faucets and pipes, and more. Water gets into the structural elements and weakens them, which can be dangerous if it is not resolved as soon as possible. Water in the wrong places in the home can also lead to mold growth, which can be a health threat for some members of the family. This is why Bryter Water Damage Restoration is always ready to provide 24/7 emergency services for water damage restoration. In a flooded property, there is the danger of people getting electrocuted. It is advisable to turn off the electric power when there is flooding. And water damage cleanup must be performed as quickly as possible because of the danger of mold growth.

Mold growth as one of the consequences of flooding in the home is not just an annoyance. The blackening or staining of parts of the home or building, such as the floors, ceilings, and walls can be a nuisance, but even more important is that mold can negatively affect the health of certain people, particularly those who have allergies or asthma. Mold produces microspores that are released into the air, which is how it spreads. These microspores can be breathed in by people living in the home and once the spores get inside the lungs, they can cause health problems, such as asthma and other allergic reactions.

With the team of experts from Bryter Water Damage Restoration, the home or property is thoroughly inspected for the presence of mold and if detected, they will perform safe mold removal where they make sure that the microspores will not spread to other rooms in the house. They will used advanced equipment to ensure that the spores will not get out of the affected space in the property.

Bryter Water Damage Restoration was established after their team has already started offering water damage remediation services for a number of years in several counties in North Carolina, including Wake, Durham, Orange, Horry County, Pender County, Carteret County, Onslow County, Brunswick County, and in the major cities of Carolina Beach, Wilmington, Moorehead, and Wrightsville Beach. The water damage to the homes and properties in the area was frequently caused by the many hurricanes and storms that pass through the region. They have set as their goal to help families recover their water-damaged homes and other personal belongings and to prevent further damage and health problems from mold growth and the water weakening the structural components of the home or building. Since then, the company has expanded to other cities, including Houston in Texas.
