November 04, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Brentwood, CA based company, Custom College Visits, will be featured on November 11th in an online interview through the first National College Planning Summit. The event is virtual, and designed to combine the top experts in college admissions, finance, search, and athletics into one accessible online event. The company founder, Janice Caine, will be one of twenty different planning professionals which present advice through the summit for the benefit of students, parents, and faculty.

The interview with Ms. Caine will take place November 11th at 9:00pm EST/6:00pm PST, and is set to offer "Ten Tips for Effective College Visits." This is meant to provide insight on things to look for when seeking a college, as well as what to expect during visits, and how to make the best first impression. The interview will be one hour in length, and is expected to be heard by more than 2,500 participants interacting in the livestream summit.

The initial broadcast of the interview and others of its kind will be free for those who participate. Other leading experts include Rob Franek, the Senior VP in Publishing of the Princeton Review, Christine VanDeVelde, the co-author of "College Admissions: From Application to Acceptance," and Philip Mikula, the National Account Executive for ACT. The Summit is described by Custom College Visits as follows: "The National College Planning Summit will help students and parents successfully navigate the ever-more competitive and complex college application and admissions process by providing in depth information about preparing for college during high school, choosing and applying to the right colleges and ultimately being successful in college with job prospects as a college graduate."

Co-sponsored by David Riklan of SelfGrowth.com and Bob and Betty Frohking of Clear Light College Success, those involved have declared that the summit will be a great success, incorporating everything that new students and parents will need to know before attending their chosen educational facility. Custom College Visits has made it clear that they are proud to be a participating member in this flagship event, and hope that the interview presented by Ms. Caine will make a difference to those who will listen.
