Atlanta, Georgia - February 04, 2022 -
The Mabra Law Firm has published a new blog post that explains how much car accident lawyers typically charge for their services. The blog post explains that an accident victim should have an experienced lawyer by their side to guide them through the tough legal terrain. A personal injury attorney in Atlanta knows how to handle compensation claims for the victim?s pain and suffering.

The blog post states that the majority of car accident lawyers charge for their services differently than most attorneys. They charge on a contingency fee basis to take the stress of bearing the legal cost off the shoulders of accident victims. A contingency fee arrangement means the attorney represents the victim with an understanding that they will only collect a fee if the case is resolved in their client?s favor. The blog post explains that a contingency fee is beneficial to an accident victim as attorneys keep their client?s best interests in mind.

The best Atlanta car accident law firm charges clients on a contingency fee basis. The blog post explains that contingency fees may depend on the fact whether a personal injury lawsuit has to be filed against the other driver. The Mabra Firm cautions accident victims against fighting a personal injury claim on their own.

The blog post explains various factors that affect contingency fee percentage, adding that the victim should always discuss the fee with their attorney and review the contract for legal services and any other fees. The blog post advises accident victims to read the fine print in their contingency fee agreement to determine what else they may be responsible for. Once the victim gets the settlement, the attorney will be compensated for any costs they covered on top of receiving their contingency fee. The blog post suggests that victims should not pay for any costs if the case is not successful.
