Homeowners looking for the best flooring contractors in Phoenix can turn to the services offered by the locally owned and operated residential and commercial contracting company Dry Star Restoration & Construction LLC.

Remodeling a house is a very resource-intensive process that demands a lot of technical proficiency and experience. Homeowners can't just trust any contractor to repair or restore their flooring, especially after an event that has caused significant water damage on the property. The first few hours after the water damage, are the most important. Moisture generally penetrates deep into most flooring materials. The same physical attributes that make carpet and wood excellent flooring materials are the reasons why they will soak up moisture and deform to the point that they become unusable and a hazard to those living on the property. Wooden flooring exposed to high moisture content will lead to cupping. Concrete floors will weaken due to water damage and dusting will occur when the water dries. Carpet flooring will become moldy and emanate a damp smell if it is left waterlogged and untreated for too long.

The expert flooring contractors at Dry Star Restoration have dealt with every kind of popular and niche flooring material such as carpet, laminate, tile, hardwood, and more, over the decade that they have been offering high-quality services for water damage restoration in Phoenix, Arizona. The company insists that hiring a professional team is of the utmost importance as only someone with extensive experience in spotting and analyzing water damage will be able to remedy it satisfactorily, within a reasonable time and budget.

A spokesperson for the company talks about the need to hire reputed water damage restoration experts by saying, "Amateur contractors who are not trained and experienced in dealing with water damage will apply quick fixes that seem logical at the time but are, in fact, counterintuitive to the long-term health of the flooring. You need to ensure that the target area that needs to be repaired is thoroughly dried, and all the accumulated moisture is removed before attempting to restore what once was. An inexperienced team will use rudimentary pumps to remove the water, leaving behind a lot of moisture, that has already seeped into the flooring materials, intact. Here at Dry Star Restoration, we use powerful submersible pumps in addition to industrial strength wet/dry vacuums to make sure that the area to be restored is completely dry before we get to work on rebuilding the damaged parts. We will also start odor removal and deodorization treatments. Our technicians will even clean your walls, flooring, furniture, upholstery, clothing, and other restorable personal items, damaged by the water.
