The Mabra Firm in Atlanta Explains What Is Considered A Catastrophic Injury

February 23, 2022

Atlanta, Georgia - February 23, 2022 -
The Mabra Firm recently published a blog post that elaborates on what is considered to be a catastrophic injury. Catastrophic injuries can require life-long medical care, which can amount to large financial expenses, in addition to pain and suffering. An accident victim can suffer from different types of injuries ranging from minor bumps and bruises to catastrophic injuries. Some injuries completely change the victim?s life.

The Mabra Law Firm, the leading personal injury law firm, boasts a team that has been fighting for the rights of accident victims for many years. When an injury occurs to the head, neck, or spinal cord, it may cause irreversible damage, thus lowering the person?s quality of life. A catastrophic injury can occur in motor vehicle accidents, work accidents, sports accidents, and other personal injury accidents.

A violent encounter can leave a person paralyzed, in addition to a lifetime of anguish, stress, and financial difficulties. A catastrophic injury victim may also suffer from dismemberment, disfigurement, severe burns, or other types of serious injuries. Besides the long-term physical pain, mental anguish, and extensive medical bills, a catastrophic injury victim may suffer from loss of earnings, earning capacity, and reduction in enjoyment of life. There are going to be financial repercussions as well.

The Atlanta injury law firm helps accident victims suffering from other common types of catastrophic injuries. This includes spinal cord injuries, which can cause a loss of sensation, loss of movement, sexual dysfunction, and an inability to control the bladder and bowel, in addition to an increased risk of other medical conditions.

Traumatic brain injuries are a type of severe head injury that may cause permanent cognitive and physical disabilities, behavioral changes, or a minimally conscious state. They can also lead to a vegetative state, coma, and even brain death. A catastrophic injury victim can also suffer from a serious injury that results in amputation or loss of a hand, arm, foot, or leg, which further poses a high risk of infection.

Some accident victims may suffer from third-degree burns that require extensive medical care. A fourth-degree burn will go through the skin and into the muscle and bone, destroying nerve endings in the process. A victim of a third or fourth-degree burn will face significant pain, risk of infection, disfigurement, and long-term physical limitations.

Some personal injury accidents may even result in damage to internal organs, which may require surgery. Despite surgery, the organ can take a long recovery period to restore its full functionality. Sadly, in some cases, even a full recovery is not possible. In such cases, a victim must file a catastrophic injury compensation claim. The most experienced Atlanta catastrophic injury lawyers can help them receive maximum compensation for their injuries and pain and suffering.

The right personal injury attorney understands the extent to which an accident affects a victim. The repercussions can be physical, emotional, and financial. The Mabra Law Firm helps catastrophic injury victims fight for maximum compensation and justice against the at-fault party. Their top catastrophic injury attorneys in Atlanta can help victims pursue damages for long-term or permanent disability, loss of income, loss of enjoyment, and financial losses.
