Children Village Pre School of Orange, CA, has presented five reasons why children's preschool education is important in a new blog post. These are the fact that learning is more than just academics; the fact that children need to be challenged with new skills; children are taught social skills; it is a stepping stone to kindergarten; and the provision of enough play opportunities.

First of all, it is essential to realize that a children's preschool is not just for teaching academics, such as reading, writing, and math, to the children. Other skills need to be developed, such as problem-solving, social skills, creativity, cognitive skills, and making friends. These are vital skills that a child needs to achieve success in the future while also being confident and happy in their lives.

Another good reason preschool education is important is that these preschools are designed to challenge children to learn new things and develop new skills. The children are challenged to learn new things, which opens new possibilities for future lessons. The children are also encouraged to play, sing, read, dance, create artwork, and more. These programs also allow the children to develop their social skills, teaching them how to interact with others and make friends. And these preschools also offer an environment where the children are encouraged to be independent and develop their self-esteem via curriculum choices. The children will also be challenged to develop their fine and gross motor skills.

According to the Village preschool, another good reason for preschool education is that they teach the kids social skills, which they need to enter formal schooling. Children in preschools learn about sharing, being kind to others, and taking turns. They also learn to follow the instructions given to them and solve problems in cooperation with their classmates or friends. They know how to: Relate to others. Express their feelings, wants, and needs. Be aware of the world around them. Develop self-help skills, such as eating, dressing, and toileting.

Still another good reason for preschool education is that preschools serve as stepping stones. This means that the kids are better prepared for kindergarten and elementary education. This is because of their better communication skills and increased interest in learning new things. Studies support these observations. In a 2013 study, it was noted that children who attended preschool had better social and cognitive skills in fifth grade compared to those who did not participate in preschool.

And finally, preschools offer enough play opportunities for the children. Within the preschool environment, the children are encouraged to explore the world around them, engage with the other kids, and participate in various activities. These opportunities are integrated into the children's play activities, making it easier for them to learn the skills that would be useful later in life.

Founded in 1980 by the Kriss family, Children Village Pre School of Orange has a philosophy based on the belief that children learn best when exposed to a challenging environment that provides a wide range of meaningful experiences and hands-on activities. They believe that preschool children should explore their surroundings to develop a good sense of decision-making and problem-solving. This preschool has been designed so that the arrangement of the furniture and space and the curriculum reflect the specific needs and interests of the children who are enrolled in the childcare center. They believe that it is vital to be compliant with the children's basic needs, such as safety, nourishment, and rest. The preschool challenges the children's creativity while also being aware and respectful of their emotional needs and helping and facilitating their social development by giving them opportunities to develop positive self-esteem.
