Sleep apnea machines are designed to make nights better for people dealing with sleep apnea. The problem has been the cost of these machines and the fact that most people cannot afford them. Luckily, Insurance Covered CPAP has made it possible for people to access these machines through insurance.

According to the company, "Most insurance companies require some information to approve your request for a CPAP sleep apnea machine and supplies including a prescription and sleep study. If you have met your deductible, your insurance company will pay their cost share of your CPAP products. If you have not met your deductible, you will have out of pocket costs that apply to your deductible until it is met. Replacement of your supplies is important to ensure your CPAP machine is as clean, effective, and comfortable as possible. Insurance companies use a replacement schedule for CPAP supplies. Usually, tubes, masks, headgear, and filters are replaced every few months and the CPAP machine is replaced once every five years."
