The roofing experts offer three kinds of roofing choices for homes and buildings in Baltimore, Maryland. The most common are the asphalt shingles, which are the choice of many homeowners and property owners because of their affordability. Asphalt shingles only cost around $200 to $250 per square meter and they are available in a number of varieties. Another possible roofing choice is metal roofing, which can be aluminum, copper, or steel. There is also stone-coated steel, which provides the texture of asphalt roofing. Meanwhile, a new roofing material that is gaining in popularity is the flat roof made of ethylene propylene diene terpolymer (EPDM), which is a kind of very durable synthetic rubber roofing membrane. EPDM roofs are quite affordable and they are durable, although they can be damaged by falling branches.

Baltimore, Maryland, is known for its extreme weather conditions. The roof of a home or building is vital in order to protect the people and property inside from damage.
