Choice Men's Health, an erectile dysfunction (ED) clinic in Atlanta, GA, has recently published an article on the use of acoustic wave therapy for erectile dysfunction. This article can be accessed at https://www.choicemenshealth.com/what-is-acoustic-wave-therapy/. Shock wave therapy has already been used in various fields of medicine for more than two decades. It has been used to treat several health issues, such as chronic pain, plantar fasciitis, kidney stones, tennis elbow, and even for the treatment of cellulite. Approximately half of all men will experience erectile dysfunction during their lifetime, and this is often due to the lack of healthy blood flow to the penis. The condition can be caused by several factors, such as: chronic illnesses, neurological disorders; vascular disease; psychological erectile dysfunction, and lifestyle factors.

Low-intensity shockwave therapy or acoustic wave therapy is a non-invasive therapy that has been used for a number of years in orthopedics to help in healing injured ligaments, broken bones, and injured tendons. It can also speed up cell growth and tissue repair through targeted sound waves. Shockwave therapy can help with erectile dysfunction by enhancing blood flow to the penis.

Acoustic wave therapy has been found to be a highly efficacious treatment for erectile dysfunction, restoring optimal erectile function. This is because most men suffering from ED have vascular issues that affect the blood vessels supplying blood to the cavernous bodies of the penis. Cardiologists have already proven that acoustic wave technology can stimulate the growth of new blood vessels. This same technology is now being utilized to stimulate the growth of blood vessels in the cavernous bodies of the penis, which in turn allows men to achieve and maintain spontaneous and firm erections.

The acoustic wave therapy session for ED will last for approximately 15 minutes, and most men will need to return once a week for treatment for six weeks. Since this is a painless and non-invasive procedure, there is no need for anesthesia, and the patient can get back to his daily activities immediately. The effects of the therapy can last for one year, with 95 percent of the men experiencing instant results. Other ED treatments include: vacuum pumps, over-the-counter pills, penile injections, and suppositories also have positive sexual performance effects but can sometimes result in temporary penile pain.

Acoustic wave therapy has been observed to work best with men who have mild to moderate ED. Approximately 70 percent of these men will no longer require medication to achieve an erection. And it is important to note that men who have diabetes, high blood pressure, high cholesterol, obesity, and heart disease and have vascular erectile problems can benefit from acoustic wave therapy. And it is also important to mention that there are other ED treatments for those who are not a candidate for acoustic wave therapy.

Meanwhile, Choice Men's Health does not only provide ED treatments. They can also offer treatment for other sexual issues, including premature ejaculation, which is when the act of discharging semen occurs too early during sexual intercourse or even during stimulation. It may not be a cause of concern if premature ejaculation happens infrequently. If it is a problem and a source of frustration, there are various treatment options, such as supplements, medications, topical sprays, and anesthetic creams.

The ED specialists at Choice Men's Health can design a personalized erectile dysfunction treatment plan to allow the patient to regain his previous sexual health.
