Pogi?s compostable poop bags are certified to be backyard compostable. This means that they can be composed at home since they are plant-based and contain zero plastic. Specifically, they have been certified to be in compliance with ASTM D6400, which are the standard US specifications for solid material biodegradation by composting, a requisite for the labelling of plastics designed to be aerobically composted in industrial or municipal facilities.

As previously announced, the bags are also certified compostable by European standards. Specifically, they have been certified under the European Bioplastics Standard EN 13432 for products made of compostable materials. The bags have also been certified under the TÜV Rheinland® Standard AS 5810 for plant-based materials suitable for home composting.

In addition, even the packaging is sustainable; the cardboard cores and the rest of the packaging are all made from recycled materials. The box is also easy to open, each bag detaches smoothly from the roll, and the opening is clearly marked. The rolls are fragrance free, fit inside all standard sized dispensers, and are estimated to provide more than six months? supply of compostable poop bags. Besides the 32-roll variant, the compostable poop bags are also available in 9 rolls for a total of 135 bags or 18 rolls for a total of 270 bags.
