Homeowners insurance provides coverage to homes against losses and damage due to fires, storms, or burglary. In Florida, homeowners insurance, by default, covers the actual dwelling and any structures attached to the dwellings, such as the garage or lanai. It may also cover unattached structures, like a shed or fence. Additional benefits of homeowners insurance are liability coverage which helps the homeowner pay for the medical expenses of a person who gets injured on their property. Another form of common coverage available is Additional Living Expense coverage which pays for reasonable living expenses such as hotel stays and restaurant meals if the homeowner and their family have to relocate while the property is unlivable after a covered event.

Most Florida residents are lucky enough to enjoy lovely tropical weather. However, it also receives at least twice as many hurricanes as other states that border the Atlantic ocean. Since Florida?s geographical location, as the southernmost state in the continental US that is surrounded on three sides by the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, makes it the most hurricane-prone state in the country, a Florida homeowner has to be extra careful while picking an insurance policy. Going with the right insurance provider can be the difference between not having to worry about all the restoration and repair expenses after a terrible event or having to dip into one?s own personal savings to afford the same.

For Florida homeowners, having insurance that covers the home in the event of heavy winds and rainfall is essential due to its climate. Flooding is another real problem to worry about. Since flooding has been a persistent issue in Florida, flood insurance does not come standard with homeowners insurance. Florida homeowners who want complete protection need to purchase an additional flood insurance policy. A spokesperson for the Florida insurance consultancy talks about the best way to get a deal or discount on homeowners insurance premiums in Florida by saying, ?Insurance providers will gladly offer you a better deal if you can convince them that your home is in good condition and poses a low risk should they provide you with the policy. So, if you are planning on starting the hunt for a comprehensive homeowners insurance policy, your best bet is to schedule an inspection of your property. This will help you gather documented proof that your property is well maintained. You will be able to convince the insurance providers that you are going to be a safe proposition for them. Some common inspections include a Wind Mitigation Report and a Four Point Inspection. These can often be completed together, for a reduced price. The cost of these inspections will fall on you, the homeowner, and you can forward the inspection report to your insurance providers to see how they might lower your rates. Some companies will also provide you with better rates if you harden your home?s security by installing CCTV cameras to deter burglaries. You can also expect a discount if you combine a homeowners insurance policy with an existing life or auto insurance policy. Do your research and we are confident that you will find a way to save some bucks.?
