Homeowners' insurance, also called home insurance, covers damages and losses to a home structure and its contents, such as furniture, electronics, clothing, and more. Most homeowners' insurance in Georgia covers these damages and losses in the event of a fire, storm, and other weather events. If a homeowner has suffered damages from vandalism, theft, or events like a tree falling on the roof, homeowners' insurance will also cover the repairs. Approximately 95 percent of homeowners in the US have homeowners' insurance. According to some estimates, 1 in 20 insured homes has a claim filed for damages each year.

Homeowners' insurance also includes liability coverage. If someone gets injured in the home, the insurance will pay for medical expenses and legal fees. It can also include a "loss of use provision", which means if the home is uninhabitable while repairs are being made, the insurance will reimburse its homeowner for lodging and food. If the home has detached buildings like garden sheds or garages, homeowners' insurance may also cover these. Most basic home insurance policies will not cover luxury fixtures of the home, such as a pool. Although most standard policies don't include flood and earthquake coverage, homeowners can always choose to add them.

The company's spokesperson talks about the best way to compare deductibles for multiple homeowners' insurance policies by saying, "Getting homeowners' insurance is critical as it makes sure you have enough financial protection to pay for your property's restoration in case of damage or loss. To find the best homeowners insurance policy, you must put in a little legwork to determine the value of the property you own, the value of the belongings you own, and the expected rise in property values over the next couple of years or even a decade. Once you have got those bases covered and have a general estimate of how much you should be ideally paying, get quotes from multiple insurance providers. There are variations in what companies will provide coverage for and it will come at different prices. You also find that the lower the deductible, the more expensive the policy is. Determine the coverage types that are essential for you and then find the insurance provider that offers the cheapest option while still providing exemplary customer service. The blog post from Compare A Quote recommends insuring a home for at least 80 percent of its replacement value. Insurance companies calculate the replacement value based on construction costs for the same materials in today's real estate market. This is, however, a trap, as because of inflation, the construction costs are likely to be higher when it comes time for replacement compared to the cost of rebuilding the home right now. This discrepancy is the reason one should plan to buy an insurance policy that offers coverage for a property for a sizeable percentage of its current value. The blog post also mentions that insurance companies do not account for the cost of the land underneath when they set coverage limits.
