Fort Walton, Fla. ? As dedicated bankruptcy attorneys in Fort Walton, Martin Lewis and Steven Jurnovoy make it a priority to keep their communities in the know, regarding important bankruptcy and financial information. With that in mind, they are taking a few moments to discuss a new market analytics platform called Epiq Bankruptcy Analytics.

Created by Epiq, a large provider of technology-aided services within the business and legal markets, this new bankruptcy analytics platform gives the user daily bankruptcy filing data. This service is catered towards legal and bankruptcy professionals, as it indexes bankruptcy filings from 2007 to current day. The software is cloud-based and uses both third-party data and proprietary bankruptcy analytics. It provides insight into disposition metrics, adversarial proceedings, and various case results.

According to Epiq, ?Visibility into this rich bankruptcy dataset enables attorneys, creditors, investors, and other professionals in the bankruptcy industry a competitive advantage and allows them to make better decisions to grow their business. Users can monitor daily bankruptcy case counts by state, court, time, or geography to determine if filing metrics are increasing or decreasing. Users can right-size their business and budgets more effectively by leveraging historical data to identify data trends for predictive analysis by analyzing case disposition and duration metrics.???

Professionals in the legal and bankruptcy industries are looking forward to the effective assistance that Epiq Bankruptcy Analytics will provide.

For individuals in Fort Walton or surrounding areas who are struggling with debt and are considering filing for bankruptcy, Lewis and Jurnovoy are here to help. They offer free assessment appointments, during which they can gain an understanding of an individual's current financial situation. As no two cases are identical, the bankruptcy lawyers work hard to make sure each client receives the best outcome possible.
