March 2022: Keep Driving releases an online report that discusses how much car repairs should cost. The article, published on Keep Driving's website, was produced by the company's automobile experts. The report was released to aid anyone looking to maintain their vehicle by providing reliable information on car repair costs.

The AAA found that one in three people cannot afford to pay for their cars' maintenance without falling into debt. This leads to a third of Americans ignoring or delaying necessary maintenance and repairs, raising the risk of future repairs as well as the likelihood of a vehicle breakdown. This report was designed to provide car owners with a better idea of the expense involved in vehicle maintenance with detailed information on the different types of repair and their costs.

According to Keep Driving, their experts conducted thorough market research to compile the report. The publication aimed to shed light on automobile care expenses by guiding readers through the costs of basic car repairs. The report provided suggestions on maintaining a car while also managing the budget for it to help car owners and drivers better manage their vehicle maintenance.
