London, ON ? As a group of plumbing technicians who defy the stereotype of the gruff, impolite plumber, Triton Plumbing + Services is quick to take any opportunity they can to be a help to their community. Right now, they are taking a moment to remind homeowners of some important details they need to know regarding backflow prevention.

As stated in London?s water by-law W-8, those who own property in London must get their backflow preventer tested at least once a year. However, as Triton plumbers point out, even if this law did not exist, it would still be a good idea to do so. Because the backflow preventer is what ensures that the water flowing out of the house does not decide to mix with the drinking or showering water, it is a vital part of a home?s plumbing system.

Because each municipality in Ontario has laid out its own regulations for backflow preventers, Triton plumbing technicians are well-versed in these different regulations, and they are qualified to inspect, repair, and maintain backflow preventers in London and surrounding areas.

For any homeowners in the area who were not aware of the legal requirements surrounding backflow preventers, do not worry! Triton is here to provide individuals with all the information they need, as well as provide any backflow prevention services they require.

Triton Plumbing + Services has made it their goal to show their community that they do not have to settle for a gruff, impolite, untidy, and unprofessional plumber. It is, in fact, possible to have a much more pleasant plumbing experience! Triton plumbing technicians will show up on time with smiles on their faces and maintain a high level of cleanliness throughout the entire plumbing job. They offer many different services, such as water heater repair and installation, drain cleaning, leak detection, and of course, backflow prevention services.
