Colour Lock, a business in Hanworth, London, United Kingdom, has released a new blog post with the primary purpose of helping people remove tough stains. Specifically, it covers ballpoint pen and biro marks, as well as some other types of ink. The company provides cleaning products but also wants to provide information and guidance to people who are struggling with certain cleaning needs. The blog post can be found on <https://www.colourlock.com/blog/cat/info-articles/post/InkMarks/>.

"People always think ink marks are the worst marks to get off anything, on par with red wine, blood and grass stains," says Sam Iyer from Colour Lock. "In reality, however, there are things that can be done. What is important is that people don't just randomly start scrubbing because the right course of action depends entirely on the type of material on which the ink mark is found."

The blog post covers materials such as pigmented leather, aniline leather, suede, nubuck and PU/bycast/bicast leather. The post addresses biro marks on these types of leather, as well as ink stains. Again, there is a difference between the two and it is important to use the right type of treatment for the best results.

"Nobody wants to see ink or biro stains, and certainly not on leather," adds Sam Iyer. "However, not all is lost and it is possible to get the stain off without destroying or discoloring the leather. We really encourage people to properly read the information we have provided first so that they use the right products and the right techniques for the best results."

As a business, Colour Lock offers leather cleaning and leather restoration services. They also produce and sell a number of cleaning products specific to leather, vinyl and vehicles. They are one of the most respected cleaning companies of their kind in the Hanworth area, not in the least because they are one of the very few that focus specifically on one type of cleaning. Most other companies offer leather cleaning as a side service to their regular cleaning services. For Colour Lock, leather requires special care and attention and professional knowledge.
