April 04, 2022

Santa Clarita, California - April 04, 2022 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Santa Clarita, California. waxdynasty.com reports on the new trend where users get paid to move. Unlike play-to-earn, the move to earn projects do not require any upfront investments. Instead, users receive monetary rewards for moving around by foot, bike, or other ways. The more time one spends moving around; the more one can earn. It is a simple concept, but the sustainability has not yet been proven.

“Play to earn is heart to stay,” stated Raul Meza, content director at Waxdynasty.com. “It is a proven concept and a very lucrative one for many online companies. It has a stickiness to it that causes players to stay so they can rack up more prizes or money. So it's not so far left field to think companies could also make move-to-earn concept a profitable one for them and a fun one for their users.”

That is one downside of using move to earn projects today. There is no indication of any sustainability for income, either for the developers or the users. Moreover, many projects limit the number of people who can join, creating artificial and unnecessary barriers. The concept of being paid to walk, jog, and run is appealing, but there is much work to do in this industry today.

Meza concluded by saying, "Now, just because something is a good idea doesn't mean it's the right idea for the times. Because if it doesn't make profit then it doesn't matter how fun it is or how many users it has, it's a business that is going to go bust."
