ZombieDisasterKits, a business located in Vancouver, Washington, is proud to have launched their travel bag organizer. This travel kit was created specifically to help people avoid the hassle of TSA checks, something that the company owners have a lot of experience with. They also released information to help people get through airport checks without any issues. ZombieDisasterKits' Jillian Gregg says: "Our Disaster-Free Travel Kit has worked especially well for one physician who, tired of continued TSA hassles and delays, used the kit to provide security inspection with all the gels and liquids as well as controlled medications she carries on board in the kit's 2 clear plastic zippered pouches. She is often asked to attend to sick travelers while onboard. This really is the perfect toiletry kit." The travel kit is currently available on Amazon. It has been designed specifically to allow for liquid and gel containment and includes three silicone bottles that are properly sized. Additionally, it keeps all personal electronics cables together, to allow for an easy flow through TSA inspection. The top part of the bag can carry various essentials that are then within easy reach as and when needed. This is why the bag is equally suitable for travelers who use other modes of transportation. "The reality is that some people have actually missed their flights because they got caught up in a TSA inspection," adds Jillian Gregg. "We have researched the various TSA rules and implemented these in the design of our bag so that travelers can have the confidence of knowing nothing will be removed and that they won't be delayed." Those who purchase the ZombieDisasterKits.com travel bag will also be provided with a free download that includes tips and references for what is and isn't allowed in their carry-on luggage. Tips also take into account the training security officers have in terms of recognizing people who may be security risks. Unfortunately, the signs they look out for can just as easily point to nervousness, which is what many people feel when they are going through inspections. The information contained, therefore, is designed to make the entire travel experience hassle free. ###
