OC Partnership presents a new article that discusses the importance of exercise for mental health. The report, published on OC Partnership's website, was compiled by the company?s mental health experts. The report was released amid the rise in mental health issues.

Mental illness affects 19.86% of adults- that's close to 50 million Americans. A lifestyle change can help anyone boost their mental health without medication or seeing a therapist. Regular exercise plays a crucial role in lifestyle modification. Mental health professionals and patients alike do not understand or appreciate the importance of exercise. Despite its considerable benefits, it is often neglected in mental health care. The publication analyzes how exercise can help improve mental health. The experts in the report explained the different types of mental health issues it can help alleviate.

According to OC Partnership, the company's experts compiled the guide after thorough research. The purpose of the publication was to highlight the role of exercise in mental health by guiding readers through how it can help them. The guide described the health benefits of regular exercise to give a clear understanding of how it works to improve mental health. The report uncovered four types of mental issues and how regular workouts can help prevent mental illness.

Since its inception, OC Partnership has provided information, advice, research, reviews, comparisons, and analyses to help spread awareness among the masses and foster understanding and empathy. The report was published as part of their regular research on mental health for their readers. Readers can find the full
