The Bronx divorce attorney Juan Luciano releases a new article (<https://divorcelawfirmnyc.com/bronx-divorce-lawyer/>) that discusses matters that are involved in the divorce process in New York. According to the lawyer, divorce can be difficult for many couples no matter how friendly they may seem.

According to the Bronx divorce attorney, "Just like marriage sets the course for your emotional and financial future, so does divorce. But unlike marriage, you are going into a divorce with a different mindset and have different needs, both for yourself and your children."

The lawyer explains that there are two ways to proceed in a divorce. The first is uncontested, while the second is contested. An uncontested divorce is when the couple can find common ground and resolve matters such as property division, child support, and child custody.

Attorney Juan Luciano mentions that the hardest part of any divorce case or family law case involves determining the parents' parental responsibilities to their children. Every party should be aware of the nuances around child custody. Legal custody can be split or shared by one parent. However, the court will decide which option is best for the child.

The article also says that alimony (or spousal support) is a financial amount paid to one of the parties in family law. You can either receive the support in one lump sum or in small increments. New York offers three types of alimony: institutional, permanent, and rehabilitative.

"The financial support of your children is essential to their future and well-being. According to New York family law, children must be financially supported until they reach the age of 21 or are otherwise emancipated. In NY, child support is calculated based on set guidelines that consider both partners' gross incomes. It further considers which parent is the custodial parent," says the divorce lawyer.

Lastly, the Bronx lawyer emphasizes the importance of having a skilled divorce lawyer when it comes to matters like child support and custody. Having an experienced lawyer may be able to help the client explore their options and make the best decision that will benefit the family.
