New York City slip and fall attorney Samantha Kucherreleases a new article (https://www.rrklawgroup.com/should-i-get-a-lawyer-for-a-slip-and-fall/) outlining the burden of proof for slip-and-fall cases in New York. The lawyer mentions how slip-and-fall accidents can happen when most people don't expect them to. Negligence can also cause falls that can lead to serious injuries.

According to the New York City slip and fall attorney, "A slip and fall accident is one that is protected under premises liability law in New York. If you are lawfully on someone else's property and you are injured in an accident caused by the owner's negligence, premises liability law says that party may be liable for your injuries. Although they are commonly called "slip and fall" accidents, any injury caused by an unsafe condition may be covered under this law."

The lawyer explains that the burden of proof in a slip and fall accident claim is one of its many complexities.

In order to receive compensation for a slip and fall accident, the victim must prove that negligence was involved. There must be certain elements that need to be proven.

Attorney Samantha Kucher states that certain elements need to be established. These elements include the fact that the victim was legally present on the property; that owner was aware of the unsafe condition; the reason for the accident; as well as damages.

Although these elements might seem easy, the lawyer states that proving negligence is not always straightforward. If there is any doubt about negligence, some insurance companies may not pay these claims. This can make it more difficult for victims to be fairly compensated for their injuries.

"In many cases in slip and fall claims, it is difficult to establish if the property owner was aware of the hazard, would have reasonably known about it, or had ample time to correct it. For instance, in accidents involving a spill or icy walkway, establishing negligence can be difficult. This is why having the skill of a slip and fall attorney can be essential to your claim," says the personal injury lawyer.

Lastly, attorney Samantha Kucher emphasizes the importance of having a skilled slip and fall accident lawyer when someone has been the victim of an accident caused by someone's negligence. Having an experienced lawyer may be able to help the victim seek compensation and receive what they deserve for their injuries.
