US-based mortgage provider Mortgage Rates Today has announced that it is going to waive mortgage fees on VA mortgages going forward. Readers who want to find out more about the many services that Mortgage Rates Today offers can head over to its website at the link: <https://www.mortgage-rates-today.com/>.

VA home mortgages are backed by the US government to help veterans, service members, and their surviving spouses buy homes with little or no down payment, no private mortgage insurance, and a reasonable interest rate. There are several kinds of VA mortgages available. The requirements for being eligible for VA mortgages vary based on the years during which one served in the armed forces, the number of years served, and whether they received some form of honorable discharge. It also applies to family members of the brave men and women who died fighting the country's wars, were taken hostage by enemy nations as prisoners of war, or went Missing In Action while on duty. Veterans or active-duty servicemen who want to avail of VA mortgages need to acquire a Certificate of Eligibility (COE) by heading over to the VA's website. Once applicants verify their eligibility and get the COE, they can head over to Mortgage Rates Today's website at the link: <https://www.mortgage-rates-today.com/mortgages/va-loan/> to find out more about the different kinds of mortgages that are available to them.

Mark Verhoeven, the CEO of Mortgage Rates Today, talks about its recent decision to drop fees for VA home mortgage seekers by saying, "Serving the country thousands of miles away in grueling conditions with the threat of imminent death hanging over them is more stress than any single person should have to handle over their entire lifetime. The brave veterans who dedicated their whole lives to protecting the sovereignty of our country deserve to be treated with dignity and respect. If they lost their lives on the battlefield, the same courtesy should be extended to their surviving family members. Here at Mortgage Rates Today, we realize how important our services are to the numerous veterans, active service members, and their family members who we serve daily. We are already doing our best to help them but we wanted to go one step further and show that we are committed to this cause. So, after a long Memorial Day weekend of remembering our veterans and active-duty military, Mortgage Rates Today would like to honor all of those who have sacrificed so much for our freedom and have protected our great nation by eliminating all fees on all VA mortgages. We hope that this significant credit will serve as a small token of appreciation for those who faithfully serve us. We urge you to find out more about our company and find contact information by heading over to the link: <https://mortgage-rates-today.business.site/>?
