With regards to oil change, they offer various options: conventional oil change, synthetic oil change, and semi-synthetic oil change. Most vehicles use conventional oil for their engines. For the oil change service, a technicians will drain the old oil from the engine and determine which conventional oil blend is appropriate for the specific vehicle. Next, the technician will change the oil filter and then refill the engine with new oil. Synthetic oil provides many of the needed qualities of conventional oil but usually includes additives to offer additional benefits for the engine, for instance, protection of the engine from the harmful effects of corrosion. However, it can?t be used in every engine. Semi-synthetic oil combines the qualities of conventional oil and synthetic oil. The engine oil has to be changed every 3,000 to 5,000 miles to maintain engine performance.

Aside from the regular oil change, the tires should be rotated with each oil change they have to be inspected for holes, leads, and the lack of pressure. The wheels also need to be regularly aligned or else the car will start to favor one side when driving straight.

The brakes also need to be inspected and serviced regularly. The brake pads and the brake fluid have to be changed periodically to ensure safety. And, of course, the batteries need to be checked and serviced regularly, or else the vehicle may not start if there?s a problem with the battery. By performing a quick battery test, the service technicians can determine how much juice the battery is delivering. And finally, there is the transmission service because the transmission will begin to wear down after some time. Typically, the transmission may require fluid service or repair. Or it may need to be replaced if the damage is too great.
