Dallas is the 9th most populated city in the United States. With this many residents, accidents happen all the time. As experienced personal injury lawyers, here are some of the most common types of personal injury cases we handle: Wrongful death This is when a loved one is killed as a result of someone else?s negligence. The party who caused the death will be held responsible for the cost associated with the wrongful death. This includes damages awarded to the estate or family members left behind after a loved one has been injured or killed due to another?s negligence. Commercial Truck accidents Unfortunately, many accidents occur involving a tractor-trailer due to negligent trucking companies. These cases can be particularly difficult because these drivers usually operate over long distances and may violate federal regulations. Some of these violations include driver fatigue, driving too many hours in a given day, not adhering to the speed limit, and limitations in driving permits for inexperienced drivers. Car accidents In the state, most drivers are aware of the rules and regulations when it comes to driving a car. Unfortunately, there are some individuals who continue to drive negligently and put others at risk. In many cases, these accidents can be prevented if a driver is more responsible on the roadways. Most happen when drivers are driving too fast, driving distracted, or driving while under the influence of drugs or alcohol. An individual can suffer serious harm in a car accident due to the nature of moving vehicles compared to stationary objects like trees and light posts. Some causes of accidents include reckless driving habits, speeding, distracted drivers, driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol, and drivers who do not abide by the speed limit and fail to properly signal when changing lanes. Catastrophic Injuries These types of injuries are life-altering physically or mentally. Examples are spinal cord injuries, brain injuries, amputations, and loss of sight or hearing. Workplace injuries In a work environment, many injuries are caused by the negligence of others, including employers, superiors, and co-workers. Any time an individual is injured on the job, they must notify their supervisor immediately in order to start an investigation of the accident. A workplace injury can mean different things depending on your occupation and where you are doing the job. Some examples of workplace injury include falling off a ladder or scaffolding due to poor set up or falling objects hitting an individual, which may lead to fractured bones or slipped discs, and machine injuries leading to loss of limbs. It is important to seek medical treatment immediately and report your injury to your employer. Your employer may have a person in charge of dealing with workplace injury claims, but the sooner you seek compensation for your injuries, the more likely it is that you will receive money to cover your medical bills and other costs, including time off work. Motorcycle accidents Motorcycle riding is known for the high number of death rates associated with it. While many drivers claim that they do not see motorcycle riders on the road, it is very common and incidents often result in serious injuries and fatalities. In comparison to a car, motorcycles have no protection for riders. And More! There are many more types of personal injuries we handle such as: Birth injuries Premises liability Defective Products Aviation Accidents Pedestrian Accidents Motorcycle Accidents and many more Frequently Asked Questions for Personal Injury Lawyers As experienced Dallas Personal Injury Attorneys, we have compiled a list of frequently asked questions. Every accident case is different. Contact our team today for a free consultation to discuss your case and see how much compensation you are entitled to. What Types Of Compensation Can I Get? The most common forms of compensation in a personal injury claim are either economic or non-economic damages. Economic Damages are the calulated costs of the the accident, such as lost wages, medical bills, property damage and future lost earnings if the injury prevents you from working. Non-Economic Damages are awarded for pain and suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, mental distress, scarring, or disfigurement. For the full extent of your non-economic loss to be determined, a court will consider how much money the injury has already cost you and will continue to cost you in the future. Punitive Damages Punitive damages are a third type of damage that can be added to specific cases. This is financial compensation that can be added to a claim if the negligence of the at-fault party was considered extremely negligent. The damages are added on as a punishment. An example of a case that would add punitive damages would be to a drunk driver who caused an accident due to being over the legal limit. Can I Recover Compensation If I Was Partially At Fault? You are still able to be compensated for your injuries even if you are partially at fault. The judge will determine all party?s degree of fault, if the other party who caused your injuries was more at fault than you were, then a percentage of their liability will be applied to your personal injury case. This is called comparative negligence, and is usually the percentage that the judge determines is fair and just. For example, if your total of damages for losses of a claim came to $10,000, but you were considered to be 25% at fault, you would only receive $7500 in financial compensation. What Should I Do If I?ve Been Injured? The first step in filing an injury claim is to seek medical attention. Make sure you note your injuries, especially if they?re serious and could be long-term or permanent. You?ll also need to document the accident scene evidence, such as photographs and witness statements. In addition, be sure to speak with a qualified attorney as soon as possible who can help evaluate your claim and recover damages for you that may cover medical expenses, loss of work time, damage to your property, and pain and suffering. Alexander Shunnarah Personal Injury Trial Attorneys are renowned for winning millions of dollars in compensation for their injury victims in accidents. We provide legal advice to everyone who contacts us seeking guidance. What Is The Claims Process? When an individual is injured in an accident either at work or due to another person, the following should be done: The injury is reported to the appropriate agencies, their doctor, and their employer. An investigation takes place regarding the incident. You should avoid accepting the first offer put forth by the other party; this may be greatly insufficient compared to what you are entitled to. Accepting an inadequate settlement can affect your chances of receiving the full amount you are owed due to the Statute of Limitations. You should consult with an experienced personal injury lawyer before signing any documents or accepting any offers from the other party in regard to your claim. If a settlement does not occur, then a trial case will be set up. The trial process goes like this: Plaintiff and Defendant attend the hearings and will call witnesses to support their case. The claimants and defendants summarize their cases. A verdict is passed by the jury, which states if compensation should occur and how much the claimant should be awarded for medical expenses, loss of

past and future income, pain and suffering, etc. What Is A Personal Injury Lawyer? Personal injury law deals with damages that may be recoverable after a personal injury accident or incident. Personal injury occurs when you are injured as a result of someone else?s negligence. When an accident occurs, it is important to be aware of your legal rights. You have the right to demand fair compensation for injuries sustained in an accident where someone was negligent or careless with their actions. An individual?s body, mind, or emotions can be harmed as a result of the actions of another person. These injuries could occur due to negligence or intentional infliction of harm. In these cases, an injured victim may be able to seek compensation from the party who caused their injury. How Do I Choose A Dallas Personal Injury Lawyer? There are many factors to consider which include your budget, the attorney?s experience, and your goals. You might be looking for an attorney who can help you recover compensation that covers medical expenses but there are other factors that affect the outcome of any personal injury claim, including emotional damages which may also affect your outcome. Qualifications and area of specialty You should choose a Dallas personal injury attorney that is experienced in personal injury or at least has a good understanding of it. The plaintiff?s success depends upon proof that negligence was involved, followed by evidence that proves how this negligence directly led to the plaintiff?s injuries. The attorney must understand how to build a case around this information and present it in a way that will convince a jury or a judge if it goes to trial. You should consider an attorney who has experience in personal injury cases because they?ll know exactly what elements need to be proven for you to win. If you want more information about the professional background of your potential representative, simply ask for it. The best way to verify qualifications and areas of specialty is to do the research. For example, you can Google the lawyer?s name and see if anything comes up that might give you some insight into their qualifications.

Experience This is a key factor in choosing a good personal injury attorney. Experience will give the plaintiff an upper hand in court. Moreover, it is possible to have a better understanding of the tactics used by insurance companies. Therefore, having more experience in court implies that your attorney will be able to command respect while at the same time detecting any important details that might affect the outcome of the case. You should also consider a top personal injury lawyer who is willing to go the extra mile and take on a case that nobody else will touch. Handling your legal issue with experience is essential because it ensures that they know what needs to happen in order for you to win. Reputation Choosing a good personal injury attorney is a lot like choosing a good car. You can have the best product in the world, but if no one knows about it, you?ll be left with a lot of extra money and a shoddy vehicle. People should be able to find out about your lawyer online. They should also be able to tell what other people are saying about them on review. To learn more about this, you can read online reviews or ask your peers for their opinions on the different law firms that are in your area. If someone has had a great experience with a specific attorney, they will be able to tell you what makes them so talented and why they deserve your business. Personal Injury lawyer fee After an accident, you may find yourself unable to work with medical bills piling up. The idea of hiring an attorney and adding legal fees should not dissuade you. Personal injury lawyers understand accidents can be a difficult time for victims physically and financially, which is why they work on a contingency fee basis. This means there are no upfront costs and you only pay if you are awarded a settlement. Once your case is finalized and a settlement is awarded a percentage will be charged for attorney fees. Having a contingency fee ensures the victim their attorney will be working hard to get maximum compensation. Personal injury lawyers also offer free consultations, so there is no risk in calling today! What Questions Should I Ask A Personal Injury Lawyer? Questions to ask during the consultation: A good firm should first offer a free consultation in order to win your business. This is when you and the firm can determine if it would be a good fit for either of you. You should therefore feel free to ask any questions which will allow both parties to get an idea of what?s going to transpire moving forward. "text": "Dallas is the 9th most populated city in the United States. With this many residents, accidents happen all the time. As experienced personal injury lawyers, here are some of the most common types of personal injury cases we handle: Wrongful death This is when a loved one is killed as a result of someone else?s negligence. The party who caused the death will be held responsible for the cost associated with the wrongful death. This includes damages awarded to the estate or family members left behind after a loved one has been injured or killed due to another?s negligence. Commercial Truck accidents Unfortunately, many accidents occur involving a tractor-trailer due to negligent trucking companies. These cases can be particularly difficult because these drivers usually operate over long distances and may violate federal regulations. Some of these violations include driver fatigue, driving too many hours in a given day, not adhering to the speed limit, and limitations in driving permits for inexperienced drivers. Accident victim gets taken to hospital for injuries Car accidents In the state, most drivers are aware of the rules and regulations when it comes to driving a car. Unfortunately, there are some individuals who continue to drive negligently and put others at risk. In many cases, these accidents can be prevented if a driver is more responsible on the roadways. Most happen when drivers are driving too fast, driving distracted, or driving while under the influence of drugs or alcohol. An individual can suffer serious harm in a car accident due to the nature of moving vehicles compared to stationary objects like trees and light posts. Some causes of accidents include reckless driving habits, speeding, distracted drivers, driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol, and drivers who do not abide by the speed limit and fail to properly signal when changing lanes. Catastrophic Injuries These types of injuries are life-altering physically or mentally. Examples are spinal cord injuries, brain injuries, amputations, and loss of sight or hearing. Workplace injuries In a work environment, many injuries are caused by the negligence of others, including employers, superiors, and co-workers. Any time an individual is injured on the job, they must notify their supervisor immediately in order to start an investigation of the accident. A workplace injury can mean different things depending on your occupation and where you are doing the job. Some examples of workplace injury include falling off a ladder or scaffolding due to poor set up or falling objects hitting an individual, which may lead to fractured bones or slipped discs, and machine injuries leading to loss of limbs. It is important to seek medical treatment immediately and report your injury to your employer. Your employer may have a person in charge of dealing with workplace injury claims, but the sooner you seek compensation for your injuries, the more likely it is that you will receive money to cover your medical bills and other costs, including time off work. Motorcycle accidents Motorcycle riding is known for the high number of death rates associated with it. While many drivers claim that they do not see motorcycle riders on the road, it is very common and incidents often result in serious injuries and fatalities. In comparison to a car, motorcycles have no protection for riders. And More! There are many more types of personal injuries we handle such as: Birth injuries Premises liability Defective Products Aviation Accidents Pedestrian Accidents Motorcycle Accidents and many more",

                "text": "The most common forms of compensation in a personal injury claim are either economic or non-economic damages.  Economic Damages are the calulated costs of the the accident, such as lost wages, medical bills, property damage and future lost earnings if the injury prevents you from working.  Non-Economic Damages are awarded for pain and suffering, loss of enjoyment of life, mental distress, scarring, or disfigurement. For the full extent of your non-economic loss to be determined, a court will consider how much money the injury has already cost you and will continue to cost you in the future.  Punitive Damages  Punitive damages are a third type of damage that can be added to specific cases. This is financial compensation that can be added to a claim if the negligence of the at-fault party was considered extremely negligent. The damages are added on as a punishment. An example of a case that would add punitive damages would be to a drunk driver who caused an accident due to being over the legal limit.",

The judge will determine all party?s degree of fault, if the other party who caused your injuries was more at fault than you were, then a percentage of their liability will be applied to your personal injury case. This is called comparative negligence, and is usually the percentage that the judge determines is fair and just.  For example, if your total of damages for losses of a claim came to $10,000, but you were considered to be 25% at fault, you would only receive $7500 in financial compensation.", "text": "When an individual is injured in an accident either at work or due to another person, the following should be done:  The injury is reported to the appropriate agencies, their doctor, and their employer. An investigation takes place regarding the incident. You should avoid accepting the first offer put forth by the other party; this may be greatly insufficient compared to what you are entitled to. Accepting an inadequate settlement can affect your chances of receiving the full amount you are owed due to the Statute of Limitations. You should consult with an experienced personal injury lawyer before signing any documents or accepting any offers from the other party in regard to your claim.  If a settlement does not occur, then a trial case will be set up. The trial process goes like this:  Plaintiff and Defendant attend the hearings and will call witnesses to support their case. The claimants and defendants summarize their cases. A verdict is passed by the jury, which states if compensation should occur and how much the claimant should be awarded for medical expenses, loss of past and future income, pain and suffering, etc.",

"name": "How Do I Choose A Dallas Personal Injury Lawyer? Answer",
"text": "There are many factors to consider which include your budget, the attorney?s experience, and your goals. You might be looking for an attorney who can help you recover compensation that covers medical expenses but there are other factors that affect the outcome of any personal injury claim, including emotional damages which may also affect your outcome. Qualifications and area of specialty You should choose a Dallas personal injury attorney that is experienced in personal injury or at least has a good understanding of it. The plaintiff?s success depends upon proof that negligence was involved, followed by evidence that proves how this negligence directly led to the plaintiff?s injuries. The attorney must understand how to build a case around this information and present it in a way that will convince a jury or a judge if it goes to trial. You should consider an attorney who has experience in personal injury cases because they?ll know exactly what elements need to be proven for you to win. If you want more information about the professional background of your potential representative, simply ask for it. The best way to verify qualifications and areas of specialty is to do the research. For example, you can Google the lawyer?s name and see if anything comes up that might give you some insight into their qualifications. Experience This is a key factor in choosing a good personal injury attorney. Experience will give the plaintiff an upper hand in court. Moreover, it is possible to have a better understanding of the tactics used by insurance companies. Therefore, having more experience in court implies that your attorney will be able to command respect while at the same time detecting any important details that might affect the outcome of the case. You should also consider a top personal injury lawyer who is willing to go the extra mile and take on a case that nobody else will touch. Handling your legal issue with experience is essential because it ensures that they know what needs to happen in order for you to win. Reputation Choosing a good personal injury attorney is a lot like choosing a good car. You can have the best product in the world, but if no one knows about it, you?ll be left with a lot of extra money and a shoddy vehicle. People should be able to find out about your lawyer online. They should also be able to tell what other people are saying about them on review. To learn more about this, you can read online reviews or ask your peers for their opinions on the different law firms that are in your area. If someone has had a great experience with a specific attorney, they will be able to tell you what makes them so talented and why they deserve your business. Personal Injury lawyer fee After an accident, you may find yourself unable to work with medical bills piling up. The idea of hiring an attorney and adding legal fees should not dissuade you. Personal injury lawyers understand accidents can be a difficult time for victims physically and financially, which is why they work on a contingency fee basis. This means there are no upfront costs and you only pay if you are awarded a settlement. Once your case is finalized and a settlement is awarded a percentage will be charged for attorney fees. Having a contingency fee ensures the victim their attorney will be working hard to get maximum compensation. Personal injury lawyers also offer free consultations, so there is no risk in calling today! ",
