Bronx ceiling collapse lawyer Samantha Kucher releases a new article (https://www.rrklawgroup.com/ceiling-collapse-lawyer/) that discusses the potential causes of ceiling collapse accidents. The lawyer mentions that ideally, a landlord would be expected to maintain the property that they?re renting out. They are expected to make necessary repairs immediately. However, ceiling collapses and building collapses still happen with frightening regularity.

According to the Bronx ceiling collapse attorney, ?From the collapse of entire buildings to partial collapses to less severe but no less dangerous ceiling collapse incidents, New York City sees a significant number of catastrophic building failures. In almost all instances, these are not mere accidents ? they are the direct result of intentional negligence, and the property owner must be held accountable for your damages and injuries.?

The lawyer explains that ceiling collapses and other building failures can be avoided by the building supervisor or property owner. Most ceiling collapses occur due to poor maintenance, leakage, and landlords neglecting to properly care for the property.

Attorney Samantha Kucher states that it takes little for a falling ceiling to cause serious injuries and damages. A partial bathroom ceiling collapse could cause a person to be knocked backwards while showering. This could cause serious injuries such as concussions or worse, possibly a traumatic brain Injury.

The article also mentions that victims may have to pay their medical expenses resulting from injuries suffered in an accident. Victims with serious injuries can face thousands of dollars in medical bills, lost wages, and other expenses. These costs are not supposed to be the fault of the renter. The landlord or property manager should be held liable for the accident.

Furthermore, attorney Kucher identifies potential issues that could lead to ceiling-collapse accidents. These problems include a minor problem with the water heater, which could cause sheetrock and/or wood to rot; snow accumulation on a roof; heavy items stored in the ceiling; and cracks within the ceiling.

Lastly, the accident lawyer emphasizes the importance of having an experienced lawyer if someone has been a victim of a ceiling collapse due to the negligence of an owner. Having a skilled lawyer may be able to help the victim receive the compensation they deserve.
