To get a water restoration service, homeowners and other property owners will just need to follow six simple steps. First, the homeowner or property owner contacts Dry Star. To ensure that the extent of the water damage is minimized as much as possible, they can be contacted 24/7. Second, their water damage restoration experts will inspect and assess all possible areas of damage. Third, they will perform the water extraction process, where most of the water will be removed from the structures of the home to stop further damage and minimize the drying time. Fourth, they will use drying equipment to remove the water that has been retained in the building materials, thus reducing the potential for mold damage. Fifth, they will perform the cleaning process, which will include odor removal and deodorization treatment methods. Their technicians will clean the walls, upholstery, floors, clothing, furniture, and other personal items that can be recovered. And sixth, they will perform the restoration of the home or building back to its original pre-disaster condition. This may include minor repairs, such as the installation of new carpet and replacement of drywall. More serious damage may require a major reconstruction of some parts of the home or commercial building.
