Central Hong Kong business Rightnow Products Limited is happy to share the story about how the business was started. They want the world to know what the company is about and how its ethos is based on personal experiences. They believe it is these experiences that have enabled them to create their For-Knees product, which they believe is the best of its kind.

Eric Arnow from Rightnow Products Limited says: "In 1984, I had my first knee surgery for a torn meniscus. I started researching knee support sleeves, and other approaches to knee pain management, partly to help myself, but also, because I thought that if I did the research, I could help others with their knees."

The research Arnow did, effectively using himself as a "guinea pig", enabled him to find out the facts about knee braces and supports. He has written extensively on this issue in his desire to give people a more in-depth view about which device to use for their own knee problems. A synopsis of the information about knee pain and possible solutions can be seen at the For-Knees website at <http://for-knees.com/the-facts-about-knee-braces-and-supports>.

Throughout his own recovery period, Arnow tested a number of different knee supports. His personal favorite turned out to be a knee compression sleeve, which has magnets hand sewn into the fabric itself. The magnet is a relatively modern type that includes neodymium, boron and iron. Secondly, it contains tourmaline, which is generally used to make jewelry.

Tourmaline is used to reflect infrared heat. The human body emits this type of heat, which means that, when wearing the sleeve, body heat gets sent back into the body, providing heat therapy to the affected area.

The tourmaline and the magnet used in the knee sleeve of the For-Knees product work in synergy to stimulate the body's circulation by affecting the iron levels in the tissue. Additionally, Arnow believes that tourmaline generates negative ions, which are also beneficial for circulation and pain reduction. Full details are available through <http://for-knees.com/about>.

Eric Arnow, however, would like to clarify the benefits from this product. He says, "No medical claims are made for this product. A medical professional should always be consulted before the use of this or any other product."
