Suffolk County domestic violence lawyer Jason Bassett releases a new article (<https://jbassettlaw.com/what-is-mandatory-arrest-for-domestic-violence-suffolk-county/>) that explains "Mandatory Arrest" for domestic violence in Suffolk County. The lawyer mentions that in New York, a mandatory arrest will be made by the police if they are sent to a domestic violence situation. Once a victim accuses someone of domestic violence, they will be arrested right away even without evidence.

According to the Suffolk County domestic violence lawyer, "In the case of false accusations, mandatory arrests create a whole spectrum of problems for the alleged perpetrator who now faces criminal domestic violence charges, even if the accuser wants to retract the charges. In most cases, an accuser doesn't understand the very real consequences of charging someone with domestic violence until it is too late."

The lawyer explains that in a report made by New York City Domestic Violence Fatality Review Committee, domestic violence homicides accounted for 17.6 percent of all homicides that occurred in New York City from 2010 through 2018. This is why the societal cost of domestic violence is very important to understand.

Attorney Jason Bassett explains that in the case of false accusations, mandatory arrests could create a whole bunch of problems for the defendant, even if the victim retracts the statement later. An accuser usually doesn't see the consequences of charging someone with domestic violence until it's too late.

In the article, attorney Bassett says that there can be exceptions to mandatory arrests for domestic violence cases. If both parties have a history of committing misdemeanor offenses, the police may want more evidence of a violent act. These pieces of evidence include the seriousness of the injuries, threats of harming the other party, and a prior history of domestic abuse.

Lastly, attorney Bassett emphasizes the importance of having a skilled defense lawyer when facing domestic violence charges or accusations. An experienced lawyer may be able to help the defendant understand their rights and protect their freedom.
