Miami personal injury attorney David H. Charlip of Charlip Law Group releases a new article explaining how personal injury laws protect accident victims in Florida. The lawyer mentions that in Florida, personal injury cases are governed by Statutes Title XLV that define negligence, duties of care, statutes of limitations, liability, damages, and recovering compensation. The laws under this statute allow the victim to receive compensation for certain damages when they are injured due to another person.

?Recovery of damages does not always result in a court case. In most cases, personal injury claims are settled outside of court when the insurance company, the victim (plaintiff), and the at-fault party (defendant) can come to a fair settlement. But if an adequate settlement cannot be negotiated, having a skilled legal professional on your side ensures that you can pursue your rights in a court of law,? says the accident lawyer in Miami.

Attorney Charlip mentions that accidents happen every day. However, if the accident was the result of someone's negligence, it is important that the at-fault party be held liable for the victim's injuries. Getting the help of a skilled attorney is essential if the victim wants to pursue a personal injury claim. An experienced lawyer may be able to help the victim get the maximum amount they deserve for their compensation.
