Gold Investing Hub, a website that offers comprehensive and accessible advice to DIY gold investors, has published a blog post that talks about gold bullion dealers and provides tips on how to buy gold as a long-term investment. To help simplify its readers' search, the website has also published reviews of some of the most popular gold bullion companies operating right now that are helping gold buyers invest in one of the oldest and most popular assets known to man.

Gold is considered a safe investment due to its relative stability. Buying gold offers serious investors a chance to diversify their risk. Its price varies daily based on supply and demand but when global economies enter an inflationary phase many investors use gold as a hedge due to its generally steady value. When a country's paper currency depreciates, the value of gold appreciates. Gold Investing Hub says that, though the price of gold has already risen in the last few years, it is never too late to start investing in gold.

Budding gold investors have several options to buy the precious metal. However, Gold Investing Hub recommends buying it in its purest form which includes bars, jewelry, and coins. It advises buyers to purchase gold within 10% of its spot price, as it is unlikely that the price of gold will rise beyond that threshold, which is a key consideration if the buyer expects to make a profit.

Gold investors also have to consider how and where they will store their purchased gold. Bank safety deposit boxes run the risk of being broken into. Home insurance policies don't usually cover the loss of a significant number of gold coins from burglaries. To safeguard one's gold, Gold Investing Hub suggests the use of gold pools, commercial services that handle storage and are adequately insured against theft and damage.

The website mentioned in their previous release then offers advice on what to look for when picking a gold dealer to transact with. First, a company's quality and reputation should be investigated based on its achievements, the number of years that it has been doing business, and its rankings within the industry. Investors should also look at online forums to read the kind of complaints that the company's customers have about it. Second, one must consider the price being offered. This requires a thorough study of the market as many companies may offer a seemingly higher price for the gold but also end up taking a big portion of the profit as administrative fees or delivery charges.

Third, the shipping options offered by a gold dealer should be considered, especially whether it offers discounts for high-volume purchasers. Finally, a gold dealer should provide multiple ways for customers to reach out to it. This should include diverse modes of communication such as phone, live chat, and email. One should aim to pick a company that offers a professional customer service team with 24/7 availability.

Some other questions to consider while picking a gold dealer include whether it offers a wide range of weights and gold percentages for sale, whether currency conversion is needed to make a purchase, whether the dealer has a physical location, and whether there is an ample cyber trail of comments and reviews that offer an insight into its services.

On its website, Gold Investing Hub has published reviews of several gold bullion companies including Monetary Gold, Orion Metal Exchange, JM Bullion, Money Metals, APMEX, and SD Bullion. The reviews discuss the history of the respective companies, list their pros and cons, and list the services and products that they offer, including the different categories of precious metals. The reviews also convey important information about the benefits offered by each company in an easy-to-understand Q&A format. Finally, the website summarizes the perks of working with each company in an insightful conclusion.

Readers can also sign up on GoldInvestingHub.com with their email to receive a free copy of its Gold Investment Guide which shows how the precious metal has a proven track record to protect wealth for generations.
