California ended the 2021-22 fiscal year with a forecast of a nearly $100 billion surplus in its budget. California Governor Gavin Newsom took the opportunity to finalize a $300 billion spending plan that aims to alleviate the state's infrastructure problems, the issue of homelessness, and to give back a sizeable tax rebate to its taxpayers.

Compton, CA, which is fondly known as Hub City due to its strategic central location and easy access to transit, has also received good news with the 2022 budget plan as California lawmakers have allocated a student housing grant of more than $80 million to the Compton Community College District to build a 250-bed student housing facility. The strengthening of the city's college system is expected to spur job growth and give its residents a chance for economic mobility.

However, while a lot of the state's citizens applauded Governor Newsom's initiative, economists are also warning legislators that the state should be conservative in its spending to make sure it has enough resources to weather the recession that seems more and more likely with every passing day. Case in point, research analysts at Goldman Sachs announced on July 6, 2022, that there is a 30% chance that the country will enter a recession within the next year.

Readers from Compton who need an extra boost to weather the recession on the horizon can head over to Simplicity Title Loans' website to learn more about its range of bespoke financial services.

If the recession does arrive, given the current state of Compton's local economy, its residents are in for a rough time. A significant portion of Compton's population lives below the poverty line ? 20.5% compared to the national average of 12.3%. The unemployment rate is also high at 16.1%. For comparison, the national unemployment rate, according to the latest statistics, is around 6.0%. The average income of a Compton resident for a year is also lower compared to the nationwide average - $13,847 and $28,555 respectively. Consequently, the median household income in Compton is just $43,230 as opposed to the country's average of $53,482.

A spokesperson for Simplicity Title Loans commented on how Compton residents can prepare for the economic uncertainty by saying, "Hold off on any big but unnecessary purchases that you may have planned. Focus on paying off medical debt or credit card bills or setting aside money for essential home improvement repairs. If you are a taxpayer and are expecting a rebate thanks to Governor Newsom's spending plan, resist the urge to use that money on something that you don't need right now. You can visit the state's website to determine how much money you are set to receive as a rebate to better plan for it. If you end up needing some extra help, you can always turn to Simplicity Title Loans. More information about our services can be found here: <https://simplicity-title-loans-compton.business.site>."
