Financial services provider Simplicity Title Loans is drawing attention to the newest exhibit launched at Glendale's Brand Library & Art Center. The project is expected to bring a lot of interest to Glendale's art scene and have a positive effect on the city's economy.

On 11th July 2022, Maryl Fleisher, Marketing Program Supervisor at Brand Library & Art Center in Glendale, announced that the public library is launching a new exhibit titled GENERATIONS which explores abstract art in Los Angeles over four generations. The announcement said that GENERATIONS attempts to "document a line of inheritance passing from parent to child, teacher to students, older to younger." The exhibit has a roster of 52 artists the works of whom were curated by Alain Rogier, Laddie John Dill, and Katie Kirk, three renowned artists who are currently active in the Los Angeles art scene. The exhibition opened to the public on July 9 and will be accessible to the public through to September 2, 2022.

"We believe this enhancement to the city of Glendale will help many residents," said a representative for Simplicity Title Loans of Glendale when asked about the company's opinion on how the exhibit will affect the city's economic and cultural landscape. In June 2022, Glendale City Council adopted a three-year economic development plan that focuses on four key areas of improvement namely brand identity, business culture, innovation ecosystem, and entertainment & lifestyle. The launch of the exciting new exhibit at Brand Library & Art Center is sure to help bolster Glendale's image and make it more inviting for those looking for a culturally elevated and refined living and working experience.

According to statistics from the Census Bureau, 6.59% of the city's 97,900 employed individuals work in arts, design, entertainment, sports, and media-related occupations. Moreover, compared to the national average, there is a much higher likelihood of finding workers in Glendale who work in the arts, entertainment, and recreation industries (1.64 times the average).

Glendale City Council's three-year plan, which emphasizes the growth of the aforementioned sectors, has a plan to attract this lucrative workforce. In the announcement, the Deputy Director of Community Development/Economic Development for the City of Glendale mentioned that it is focusing on positioning it as a "destination city" that offers the promise of a luxurious lifestyle while also being the ideal ground for entrepreneurs to strike out on their own.
